MAYOR PRESENTS OPPORTUNITIES FOR DEVELOPMENT TO INVESTORS

On Tuesday, Mayor James J. Fiorentini took part and served on a panel for the Department of Housing and Community Development (DHCD).

The event was held at the Roma Restaurant in Bradford. Its audience was made up of a bus tour of developers looking for opportunities for development in the Merrimack Valley. Dennis DiZoglio, who led the conversation, allowed for those on the panel to inform and educate investors about empty spaces waiting to be filled, areas to be developed and possible ideas to be put into action. One of the speakers, Marty Jones, President and CEO of Mass Development, numerated countless opportunities for development and growth within the Merrimack Valley.

Mayor Fiorentini gave his input on the possibilities for growth in the city of Haverhill. He emphasized that in order to attract more visitors and current residents to stay in Haverhill, the city has to continue to work off its momentum, by way of what the city has always been driven by: diversity.

Mayor Fiorentini stated:

“Haverhill is both a small and big city: it has a small city feel, but it is big in what it has to offer. That’s what separates us from any other city. The downtown area alone has enough restaurants, small shops to satisfy the average person’s appetite. By investing in opportunities for development in the City, we are expanding on what we can offer people, be it a long time resident or new comer. We want to continue to inspire growth in the city of Haverhill.”
